Leading Commercial Cleaning Firm Enters Philadelphia Market

Jantize® America looks to offices and churches, medical facilities and schools, banks and auto dealerships, restaurants and condominiums. And more...

Philadelphia: Duke Ruppert wants to clean up Philadelphia, one business at a time.

No, Duke isn't some caped crusader or part of some law enforcement agency cracking down on lawless activity among the skyscrapers and business parks. He's more interested in scrubbing and washing those cracks.

Jantize® America, a leading franchiser of commercial cleaning services, is continuing its national expansion with the sale of development rights for the Philadelphia territory to local businessman Duke Ruppert.

The sale is part of a planned series of area developers rights since Jantize® Charlotte general manager Paul Dorsey took over management of the company promising accelerated expansion into major markets and unparalleled corporate support for area developers.

"We are extremely pleased to have Duke on board in Philadelphia," said Dorsey. "He is a quality businessperson who really gets the message of Jantize® America, and the opportunity to create significant success for himself and for others."

Ruppert says the decision to purchase the Philadelphia area developer rights was a no-brainer. He has 16 years experience in the commercial cleaning industry.

"I realized that given the opportunity to do this business on my own, there's no doubt I would be just as successful if not more so," says Ruppert. "What I liked best about the Jantize® opportunity was the chance to live my dream, which was to own and operate a janitorial franchise business. My commitment is to become one of the top janitorial service providers in the area and look forward to helping others in growing their own businesses as well."
